Your new business idea needs a plan to be successful. The SBA has set guidelines for a business plan to secure funding and partnerships. Our business plan writers understand these requirements and will help develop your ideas before and during the early phases of your business, putting you in position to succeed. What Are SBA Business Plans?

The U.S. Small Business Administration (SBA) has compiled a list of guidelines for how business plans should be prepared, including what needs to be outlined and included in order to get funding from banks and other institutions. The SBA guidelines offer a framework for you to develop your idea more fully before and during the early phases of your business. By working with Bargain Business Plan, you'll have consultants who know these guidelines and can help you figure out the best way to present your ideas to secure funding and partnerships.

How Business Plans Help

You can get SBA loans from financial institutions with a business plan, which includes research and analysis, five-year financial projections, full competitive analysis and marketing plans to answer any questions your lenders may have. You're better prepared to answer questions or show supporting documents and research when entering a meeting with a potential lender. It also shows them you understand the market, and breaks down your costs to support what the money will be used for.

Beyond the financial projections aspect, business plans include a blueprint for business owners during early development stages and give you a better understanding of your market, industry trends, marketing strategies, and sales goals. After you've secured your funding, the plan will help you continue setting up your business – from hiring needs, management goals, marketing plans and more. It can help set yourself up for success, especially when you're using an expert consultant from Bargain Business Plan to help with your business plan needs.

How to Apply for an SBA Loan

If you are looking for a way to finance your small business, you might consider applying for an SBA loan. The SBA (Small Business Administration) has several loan programs meant specifically for small business ventures. Whether you need working capital, money to buy premises or equipment, or a business line of credit, there are SBA loan programs to suit you.

So how can you go about applying for an SBA loan? Consider the steps listed below as your roadmap to the loan programs that the SBA offers.

Think about eligibility

Just because you are a small business doesn't mean you are eligible for an SBA loan. Banks typically can't approve SBA loans if your FICO credit score is below 680, you haven't been in business for more than two years, or if your business isn't turning a profit.

Go to a bank that works with SBA loans

Do a Google search of banks in your area and find one that advertises itself as a lender that works with SBA loans. While most banks can accept your SBA loan application, you want to find one where the bankers are experienced buy gabapentin online with the process. They will be able to advise you and will know how to work through the process quickly and efficiently.

Assemble the materials you need

You need firepower when you go to apply for an SBA loan, starting with everything on the SBA's loan application checklist. An application for the type of loan you want is just the tip of the iceberg. You also need information about your business's finances, tax returns, business licenses or certificates, and more.

You also need a business plan—one that includes details about your company's goals, vision, and financial projections. A bank, like any investor, is not going to give you any money if there is little chance of that money being paid back. A business plan will help convince the bank that your business has what it takes to succeed and is worthy of an SBA loan.

At Bargain Business Plan, we can help you prepare the perfect business plan for your SBA loan application process. Call us today at (800) 866-9971 for a free consultation.

How the SBA Helps Small Businesses

Many people have heard of the Small Business Administration (SBA), but what does it do? Starting a new business can be a lot of work, and it may seem overwhelming at times, especially if you are new to business ownership. This is where the SBA comes in — there are programs in place to help you because the U.S. government knows that small businesses just like yours are essential to the economy.

The SBA can provide new business owners like you with resources and tools to find success from the early days of business planning to continued growth of continued funding and additional local support. Here are a few of the programs and support systems set up for small businesses.

SBA loan programs

While the SBA doesn't actually grant loans, they do have several loan programs that are guaranteed by the SBA. Many financial institutions offer loans specifically for small businesses that are backed by the SBA. These loan programs often have lower interest rates than other business loans, and some are even designated for specific purposes like real estate or equipment.

If you are more interested in grants, the SBA has several different grant programs for research, development or other purposes, so check out their requirements and eligibility to find a grant that may help your business continue to succeed.

Certification support

Your business can be certified if you meet certain requirements. So if you are a women-owned business with 51% female ownership, a veteran owned business or a business in a rural area, there are support programs to help get you certified. The benefits of certification can include special grants or loan programs, federal contracting or get specialized training.

Development centers

There are 900 development centers around the country set up to help small business owners. At these centers, you can find free and low cost consulting services and other resources. They can also be good locations to find or meet like-minded entrepreneurs and network within the local small business community. From launching your business to growing it for years to come, the development centers have tools and training to set you up for success.
